Dear Mr. Innes:

On my return yesterday I saw Professor Mavor and after considering the future carefully I am glad to offer you a position in the University of Toronto for next year as Lecturer in Economics at a salary of $2000.

Lecturers are appointed from year to year and I cannot promise a permanent appointment, but I have not any doubt that with things as they are such a position in the University of Toronto would not be to your disadvantage in receiving a satisfactory appointment elsewhere, should it so turn out that we are unable to create a permanent position for you here.

I hope that you will be able to come to us and that you will find your work in the University satisfactory and mutually agreeable. With kind regards, I am,

Yours sincerely,

President.
